

Bill and Cathy McArthur in Spain: 9

We found thick fog as we went out for an early breakfast on Tuesday morning in Toledo. Before long, we were on the road toward Granada. We did a side trip to the land of Don Quixote and found a wonderful hill covered with windmills and an old Moor castillo. As we traveled through the Plains of La Mancha, we found olive groves covering every available hill and mountainside. As we neared Granada, we saw a backdrop of towering, snow-covered mountains. This snowy background and the foreground of the olive groves produced a wonderful visual effect.

Thanks to some nifty navigation by Tom, we arrived at our hotel in Granada at around 4:00 PM. We headed out for coffee in a pleasant plaza and enjoyed sunny temperatures of around 75 degrees. We did a lot of walking around the old Moorish quarter and walked up to the Alhambra to try to purchase tickets. We found that we would need to wait for the morning.

We topped off the day with pizza for dinner.
